statement said.

"We are said to have to take this step, and have tried to avoid it. However, given the state of the oil market we had no choice. The Chapter 11 filing gives us the opportunity to maximize payments to creditors and reorganize the company after down-sizing," said President Kenny Gates, son of the company's founders, in the release.

Pratt Well Service will move as quickly as possible to sell its service business assets, under the protection of the court, the statement said.

"The company did not say how many employees would be laid off.

Pratt Well Service's employment has varied widely, reflecting the boom-and-bust cycles of the industry. It had about 55 employees during the late 1980s and early 1990s.

at number sank to 12 in the late 1980s, according to the company's online history. In 1986, Pratt Well Service had 88 employees, and a few years ago, approximately 65 employees, according to its history.

Appearing in the bankruptcy papers are gross revenue income, before deductions and exclusions, that reveals the revenue nosedive:

- In 2014, $12,354,533
- In 2015, $8,154,954
- From Jan. 1, 2016, to May 31, 2016, $1,632,730.

Kansas delays June payment to schools

The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas will be paying schools a week late after withholding the final payment of fiscal year 2016 to keep its budget out of the red.

The Wichita Eagle reports school districts will receive a total of nearly $280 million in state aid. July 7 mark it as a June 30 tent.

including some Kansas counties, other creditors include businesses in the region that sell pump and well field supplies, chemicals, truck parts and fuel.

Husband and wife Carl R. and Alma J. Gates started the company out of their home in Pratt on March 11, 1946, according to the company's history.

After Kenny Gates was discharged from the Army in 1970, he returned to work for Pratt Well Service. In the mid-1970s, the company signed a contract with Northern Natural Gas, Lyons, to work on underground storage wells, the history said, and that was a turning point.

Pratt Well Service prided itself on how it controlled its debt and survived the 1980s oil bust. It also considered its employees as crucial to the company's story and offered pay and employee benefits greater than that found at competitors.

"Having long-term, loyal and experienced people is what has set Pratt Well Service Inc. apart from other well servicing companies," the company history stated.

the largest hit, with collections plunging by more than 75 percent for both sources. Kansas collected $50 million less in fiscal year 2016 in oil severance than in fiscal year 2015.

On the flip side, after the Legislature increased cigarette taxes, tobacco tax collections shot up by 56 percent, or nearly $50 million. Kansas took in $141 million more in sales tax than the previous year, an increase of 6.6 percent.

For the entire fiscal year, several revenue sources — such as the sales tax and tobacco tax — were essentially in line with estimates, with a few large exceptions. Corporate income taxes were 9 percent below estimates for the year. Individual income taxes were down 3 percent for the year. Oil severance fell nearly 18 percent below expectations.

For June alone, revenue sources fell mostly below expectations, resulting in collections coming in $33.5 million below estimate.

Among the largest misses were corporate income taxes, which were off by 25 percent, and gas severance taxes, which were 60 percent below projections.

The June revenue report followed a $76 million shortfall in May. The June figures continue a nearly uninterrupted pattern over the past year of below-estimated revenue figures. Gov. Sam Brownback's administration is in the midst of a review of a revenue estimating process after the almost-unbroken streak of misses during the last year. The review eventually will put forward recommendations to improve accuracy.

The review appears primarily focused on the estimating process itself, rather than the state's tax policy, which the governor's critics say contributes to the repeated over-estimating of expected revenue. The state's tax policy has harmed the ability to fund the state's budget, they contend.

"Several policies eroded the well-being of Kansas children since 2011, but none more so than the passage of irresponsible and unsustainable tax policy in 2012," said Annie McKay, president of Kansas Action for Children. "The saga behind the governor's trademark initiative has been well-documented. Perhaps the most unfortunate consequence of the fiscal mess it created, however, is the false assumption that Kansas must now choose between its most important investments."

The Legislature went through a wrenching debate over taxes in 2015, arguing over whether to repeal tax breaks on businesses. Owners of limited-liability companies currently may collect income from their LLC tax-free, and that policy remains in place although lawmakers lifted sales and tobacco taxes.

Brownback recently opened the door to re-examining tax policy, however. "Let's take a good look at it," the governor told 880 WFBW radio in early June while speaking about business taxes.
